

Editorial « Taking international action for the rights of young children»

The first part of the school year was particularly busy for OMEP, marked by sustained engagement with several international bodies in Geneva, Paris, and Samarkand. This active presence reflects the Organization's ongoing commitment to influencing international policy frameworks in order to promote recognition and advancement of every child's fundamental right to free, inclusive, quality education from early childhood onwards.

In September 2025, OMEP participated in the first session of the open-ended intergovernmental working group organized by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in Geneva. On this occasion, it advocated for formal recognition of the right to education from early childhood as part of a future optional protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child. This major step forward would strengthen the justiciability of this right and encourage States to investing sustainably in preschool education.

The debate continued in December during an informal consultation bringing together nearly 80 states, with the participation of civil society organizations such as Human Rights Watch, confirming the growing interest in this proposal. In October 2025, in Paris, during the 222nd session of the UNESCO Executive Board, OMEP contributed to discussions on global education priorities, recalling that early childhood must be fully integrated into educational governance frameworks.

From October 30 to November 13 in Samarkand, during the 43rd UNESCO General Conference, OMEP France presented a policy statement and called for the inclusion of all early childhood staff in the revision of the 1966 ILO-UNESCO Recommendation concerning the Status of Teachers, in order to improve working conditions, the attractiveness of the profession, and the quality of educational practices.

Finally, in December 2025, the International Symposium on the Right to Education and the work of the Technical Advisor Group responsible for preparing the 2026 Global Report on ECCE provided an opportunity to further reflect on the modalities of public financing for early childhood education. These discussions highlighted the need for ambitious policies that guarantee equitable and progressive access to free preschool education, particularly for the most vulnerable children.

Beyond institutional advocacy, OMEP is strengthening its position within UNESCO through its application for NGO associate status and its cooperation with the Organization, notably through a series of six joint webinars planned for 2026. The effective improvement of young children's right to education depends on the commitment of States, advances in knowledge, and the daily involvement of professionals.

It is by combining international advocacy, research, and high-quality implementation in the field that we will be able to serve young children in a sustainable manner and bring their rights to life.
